CHINDINMA NNOLI
When will my feet catch fire?

On View September 8, 2022 – October 8, 2022
509 W 24th Street, New York, NY 10011

The pains of growing, 2022, oil and acrylic on canvas, 62 x 54 inches.

Marianne Boesky Gallery is pleased to present When will my feet catch fire?, a solo presentation of five new paintings and a sculptural work by Lagos, Nigeria-based artist Chidinma Nnoli. The works on view explore various modes of processing trauma and healing, and delve into the ways in which stigma, dissociation, and dominant societal narratives limit discourses around traumatic events. For Nnoli, the works pose the question: “When will the things I am going through be ‘big’ enough for me to speak about?”

Nnoli situates seemingly silent feminine figures within otherworldly, sparsely populated terrains. Deploying a thick, pastel-hued impasto, Nnoli creates landscapes that are as fleshy and tangible as they are ethereal and mysterious. The balance between the earthly and the celestial continues in Nnoli’s debut sculptural work Is there a God beyond the sky? in which a pair of hands reach upwards from a brick-like, earthy base.

The exhibition's title is derived from Lavender, lavender, when will my feet catch fire? a poem Nnoli wrote in 2017. Since 2020, Nnoli's work has referenced her poetry, much of it written in late adolescence, with each series in her oeuvre referencing a separate poem.

This latest body of work marks a transition in Nnoli's compositions, away from interior spaces, familial subjects, and Romanesque architecture, and towards obliquely evocative landscapes centered on iterations of a feminine figure. In this way, the new paintings insist on the importance—the human value—of a single subject's embodied experience and spiritual existence. Philosophically and spiritually, When will my feet catch fire? explores the emotions—liberating as well as daunting—born of claiming one's independence.
